In a busy town called Al-Badia, there was a boy named Ali who loved sports. He wanted to be like the players he admired. One sunny day, his uncle gave him a new football. Ali named it Bobo and loved kicking it around. Bobo was shiny and bouncy, and Ali had fun playing with it in the yard.

Ali's friend, Layla, also loved sports. She had a new basketball called Bouncey. Bouncey was bright and fun to play with. Ali and Layla decided to have a friendly game of football versus basketball. They gathered their friends at the field and played exciting matches. Faris weaved through the players with agility, while Nadia soared through the air with each shot, filling the field with cheers and laughter. The games were intense, with each team giving their all to win. After several thrilling matches, they sat together, tired but happy, sharing stories and laughter.

As the sun began to set, they talked about why they loved sports. Ali said he practiced football every day, dribbling and shooting goals. Layla agreed, saying she spent hours practicing basketball skills like dribbling and shooting hoops. They both agreed that playing with friends and having fun made sports special.

Through sports, they learned important things like working together, never giving up, and being fair. They felt proud of what they achieved in each game and happy to have good friends to play with. For Ali and Layla, sports were not just games but a way to have fun and learn new things..
