Part 1

Read the text and match the correct paragraphs (A - E) to the number (1 - 6).

You can use each letter more than once.

There is one EXAMPLE.

Paragraph A

The way we eat now is not the same as it was in the past. Food that was unusual forty years ago might be seen as boring nowadays. Our cooking methods have also changed because of developments in technology. What issues will change the way we eat in the future?

Paragraph B

Food prices will certainly be an important issue. Experts predict that certain food will become much more expensive in the future. One example is meat. Although it is a regular part of many people's diet nowadays, prices will increase significantly or even double by 2020. Therefore, many people may reduce the amount of meat they eat and choose cheaper alternatives instead.

Paragraph C

The food industry is already developing other options to meat which may become popular in the future. It is even possible that most food will be produced by scientists rather than farmers. For instance, scientists are developing a man-made type of meat. This product looks and tastes like animal meat but is produced in a laboratory! Environmentalists say that producing food in this way requires less water and energy than traditional farming methods. This may be better for nature, but will people want to eat laboratory food?

Paragraph D

More people may look to nature for food in the future. People are becoming increasingly worried about the chemicals used in processed food and the negative effects on our bodies. As a result, different types of fruit, vegetables or other plant-based sources will become more popular. Nutritionists say that besides being free of artificial chemicals, natural food provides most of the things our bodies need. Some experts predict that plant-based diets will become very popular by 2050.

Paragraph E

Of course, these products will only become popular if we are willing to try them. The food industry will need to convince people to see food in a different way, which might not be easy. Will we really change our beliefs about food?

Keys to Business Success

Are successful business people born with the ability to make money or can business skills be developed?

Some people make money doing what they love. Arwa Ahmed was interested in food from an early age. While she was a student, she started her own cooking company, which was quite successful. After university, Arwa launched a very popular food blog and later a food tour company in Dubai. Ed Hardy is a similar example. Ed loves exploring mountains and technology. When he was 17, he created a mobile app for tourists who needed maps and weather advice. Both Arwa and Ed turned their interests into successful careers.

It is important to understand what the market wants. Ed's app was successful because he knew exactly what adventure tourists needed. It also helps if you have knowledge of the industry that you want to work in. Mona Essa already had work experience in online retail and this helped her understand her customers. She started her online baby product business in 2011, and it has become one of the most successful shopping websites in the Middle East.

Certain skills are essential for a successful business career. A business degree may be useful here. In fact, Arwa Ahmed was studying business when she launched her first company. However, there are other ways to develop your skills. Youth Connect is an event at Expo 2020 in Dubai, which gives young people from all over the world the chance to share their ideas. The Ministry of State for Youth Affairs has also created a programme called UAE Youth which provides business courses and workshops to young people. Finally, relatives can often be a useful source of advice if they have business experience. When Moosa Ali launched his clothing company, his mother was able to help him because she also had a fashion business. Moosa started his company when he was 12, which shows that business success can come at any age!

Understanding Population Growth

The UAE's expansion has been incredible. Between 1970 and 2015, the population increased from 230,000 to an astonishing 9 million. This trend is likely to continue, with a potential population of almost 10 million by 2020. In particular, Dubai has seen remarkable growth. 1.5 million people lived there in 2005 but this rose to 2.4 million in 2015. It is estimated that it could reach 4 million by 2020. What do these figures tell us about Emirati society?

Recent migration trends, both into and out of the UAE, are very interesting. The number of expatriate workers has increased dramatically in the last decade. In fact, the UAE is home to people from over 200 different countries. Interestingly, in the last ten years, there has also been a decrease in the number of Emiratis who are taking jobs abroad. Finally, there has been a rise in the number of Emiratis who are returning after working abroad. Put simply, more people (both foreign and Emirati) are moving to the UAE, while fewer local Emiratis are leaving.

People might move abroad when they are unhappy in their own countries, often because of social issues, such as high levels of crime or political problems. However, unemployment is the main issue which makes people decide not to stay in their own countries. This certainly helps us understand migration trends in the UAE. After the decline of the pearl industry in the 1930s, many skilled people left the Gulf. The numbers leaving grew in the 1940s and reached their highest level in the following decade. By contrast, the discovery of oil has led to better economic opportunities, which is why fewer people have moved away from the region since the 1960s.

Of course, migration is not only about leaving a negative situation. Instead, some countries may offer perks that attract someone even if he or she is happy in their native country and enjoys their work there. For families with young children, a country with fantastic weather or leisure opportunities, like Australia, may be very attractive, even if living standards are good in their own country and they enjoy their jobs there. Many people certainly move to the UAE for these reasons, although tax-free salaries are the main perk that attracts most expatriates.
