The Baseball Cap

In the 1840s, baseball teams such as the Knickerbockers from New York City wore a variety of different hats to protect their eyes from the sun. The first team to wear something similar to modern caps was the Brooklyn Excelsior in 1860. These hats or caps were called the 'Brooklyn Style'.

The front part of the cap, called the peak, was softer and shorter than that of the caps we have today. Also, the caps were made of wool or cotton, while most of today's caps are polyester. Like today, the main part of the cap had six smaller parts with a button on the top. Also, a team usually had their name or symbol on the front of the cap, so people could recognise them. And, of course, the cap was the same colour as the team's colours.

The modern cap first appeared in the 1940s, when hat makers used rubber in the peak to make it harder and longer to protect the player. The caps also came in different sizes, but today baseball caps can fit anyone, because you can change the size from the back.

Today, baseball players are not the only players with baseball caps. Other athletes wear them too, including tennis players and golfers. In fact, people wear them when they play any outdoor sport and need to protect their eyes from the sun.

Finally, baseball caps are not only useful for athletes. Police officers and construction workers wear similar caps for the same reason. They are also a fashion statement for many young people.
