Read the following text then answer the questions below.

(A) There is a wide range of greetings around the world. These ranges from the common handshake to other strange rituals found in some countries, but people in different places shake hands in different ways. ((They)) shake hands as a sign of respect. Now, let's have a look at how people greet each other in different parts of the world.

(B) In the United States and Canada, for example, a simple handshake or nod is the norm. Shaking the person's right hand firmly while looking him or her in the eye is the usual method. However, handshakes aren't usually that long. It may last only for 2 or 3 seconds.

(C) In France, for example, handshakes are very quick. In Brazil, people take more time to shake hands. In both Brazil and France, it's ((common)) to shake hands with people when you arrive and leave.

(D) In many parts of Asia, handshakes are gentle and can last 10 seconds. Handshakes are common in China, but it is also appropriate to nod your head when you meet a person for the first time. In Thailand, taking a bow is referred to as the Wai, and the higher you place your hands, the more respect you're showing. In Japan, on the other hand, a deeper bow indicates a higher level of respect.

(E) Handshakes are known to spread a number of germs that cause diseases through direct skin-to-skin contact. During the COVID-19, several health organizations encourage people to use alternative ways of greeting instead of a handshake to prevent transmission of the virus. They suggested some options like fist bumping, elbow bumping, smiling, bowing, waving and putting hand over heart.

Read the following sentences and make questions that match with each answer:

Social customs are shared throughout the Gulf Arab countries. An Islamic greeting (al-salam alaykom)is the most appropriate, and men follow this with a quick nose-to-nose touch while shaking hands. Women greet each other by kissing several times on both cheeks. Men normally do not shake hands with women in public. It is customary to ask about the health of a person and his or her family several times before beginning light conversation. Refreshments usually are served before serious matters are discussed. It is customary not to use first names but to say "father or mother of (oldest son)." Respect and courtesy are shown to elders, and in their presence young men are expected to listen more and speak less. Segregation is still evident in social life. Men are entertained in majlis (large living rooms, often with a separate entrance), while women entertain friends in the home. It is customary to take off one's shoes before entering a private house. Emiratis stand close to each other when interacting. It is acceptable for men or women to hold hands. The presence of many ethnic groups has led Emiratis to be tolerant of other social customs, yet they remain conscious of their own customs as markers of cultural identity. The UAE national day, 2 December, is the most important secular celebration. Cities are decorated with colored lights, and folklore troops perform in heritage villages. 1 January is a holiday but is not celebrated by nationals. Expatriate communities celebrate their own religious and secular holidays.

Sharing with Friends

My name is Sayed and I want to tell you about my friends, Akira and Itsuki. They live in Japan, but they speak English perfectly. Last month, they came to visit us in Sharjah, and our families had so much fun together. Their mother has a factory that makes material that clothes and accessories are made of and my mother designs and makes abayas. Their father and my father are both engineers. My father has a transportation technology company. Their father has an internet company. They met at a business meeting, but now they are very good friends. The adults enjoyed talking about work. Akira and Itsuki were very excited to learn about falconry, and I had fun teaching them. We also went to a park, and they met three of my friends from school. We all played football together. Itsuki is very good at sports, so our team won. On their last day in the UAE, Akira, Itsuki, their mother, and father all dressed in traditional Emirati clothes and we took a picture together.

Next year, my family will go to Japan and we will see our friends. I don't know what they will teach us about Japanese culture, but I hope we can take a picture with everyone wearing kimonos. Read a text about Sayed and his Japanese friends.
