Q1: Read the text and answer the following questions:

I've just read a blog that says that we won't need doctors in the future. Robots will look after patients, do operations and give out medicines. I completely disagree with this idea. I think that we will always need doctors because when you are sick, you want to talk to a person and not a robot. Also, every patient is different – doctors can understand this, but robots can't. In addition, sometimes doctors have to make difficult decisions about how to make a patient better. In my opinion, robots can't make decisions, so we will always need to talk to a doctor. Overall, robots can help doctors to do their jobs, but I don't think they will ever do their jobs for them. By Dalia

Q5: Suggested Answer

Some people think that technology will do all the translation for us, but others believe learning languages is still important. In my opinion, we will still need to study languages because technology can help, but it is not perfect. So, learning a language helps us communicate better. In the future, language learning will still be useful. Also, it can help people get good jobs. In addition, it makes traveling easier and more enjoyable.
