You must wear your seatbelt when in a car - it's the law! Passengers in your car must also wear their seatbelts. You must follow speed limits and pay attention to road signs and traffic signals. You must stop at red lights and stop signs, and give pedestrians the right of way.

You mustn't use your phone while driving - using a mobile without a hands-free device is illegal in many countries. You mustn't drink and drive either.

You should use turn signals to let other drivers know when you're going to change lanes or turn. Keep a safe distance between your car and the car in front of you. Don't drive too fast or too slow, and don't tailgate.

Reading Comprehension

Directions: Read the passage and answer the questions.

For most children today, school is like a second home. But in the past, schools were very different from today.

In Victorian England,

Classrooms were very big and the windows were usually very high. Students couldn't see outside! One teacher often taught more than 70 children, so teachers were sometimes cruel. Paper was very expensive, so most students didn't have notebooks. They wrote on 'slates' with 'slate pencils'. Students learnt the three Rs: Reading, Writing, and Rithmetic (Maths). Once a week they had Geography and History. Girls developed other skills; for example, they learnt to sew.

Today,

Classrooms are big and comfortable and usually they have a lot of windows.

Teachers are nice and friendly with children. You can tell them your problems and they can help! All students have got books, notebooks and computers. Most schools have also got libraries and computer rooms. Children learn and do a number of interesting subjects like Science, Art or PE. Therefore, they have a good knowledge of various subjects.

- A. School rules
- B. School subjects
- C. Schools then and now
- D. The importance of schools

2- What does the underlined word “cruel” mean?
